The House conferees receded from the disagreement to amendments involving $11,500 and the Senate receded from amendments involving $75,000 additional for provisions and clothing. Feb. 13.—In the Senate the House bill to restrict the immigration of Chinese was taken up and Mr. Sargent (Rep., Cal.) advocated the measure. He argued that it was within the constitutional power of Congress to legislate in contravention of a treaty. This power had been sustained by the courts and executive departments. The principle was laid down by Hamilton, that the power of self-defence resides in the nation, and a nation must exercise it, even though it act selfishly. China was not in favor of the emigration of her people. Therefore the passage of the bill, he did not believe, would make any changes in our commercial relations with China. At the proper time he (Sargent) would propose amendper time he (Sargent) would propose amend-ments to the bill, providing that it should not effect embassies nor shipwrecked persons. There were now in California more Chinamen than there were voters, and they were increasing enormously. There was in San Francisco a city within a city, a city cut out of Pekin.

Mr. Matthews (Rep. O.) opposed the bill and said he was not willing to let the occasion pass without putting on record some of his reasons for opposing it. His respect for the plighted faith of a nation, in solemn treaty with a sov-ereign power, would compel him to seek to accomplish a remedy by some other means than by an arbitrary act of Congress. He read from the Burlingame treaty and said that we solicited from China the covenants which we were now about to break, and we were about to do it by putting the stamp of hypocrisy on ourselves. pocrisy on ourselves.

Mr. Thurman (Dem., O.) said that to him it seemed perfectly elear that it would be ruinous to this or any other country, to say that a treaty could be only ended by the negotiation of a new treaty. If that doctrine was true, the empire of China, by refusing to negotiate a new treaty, could hold the United States to this, no matter how pernicious it might be to us. He argued that the newer of abrovating treaties rested in abrogating treaties rested in The immigration of Chinese to the United States always had been a more suitable subject for legislation than for treaty. In case a treaty should be simply abrogated, the Chinese could still come to this country unless there was legislation to prevent them. China was the last country to insist upon the immigration of her subjects when for the immigaation of her subjects, when for ten centuries she shut out the whole world. We had three races on this continent now—the white man, the black man, and the red man and we wanted no more mixtures. He was in favor of the migration of white people to this country, because every one of them added strength and wealth to the nation; but that was not the case with the Mongolian.

Mr. Sargent (Rep., Cal.,) submitted several amendments to the bill of a verbal character, and they were agreed to. Feb. 17.—In the Senate the bill to amend Feb. 17.—In the Senate the bill to amend the Internal Revenue laws containing an amendment to reduce the tax on tobacco was considered. Mr. Bayard (Dem., Del.), who had charge of the bill, explained that there were important amendments which affected the revenue. It was known that more than one-third of our excise duties were drawn from the simple agricultural product of tobacco. Since 1875 the tax had been 24 cents per pound on every variety of manufaccents per pound on every variety of manufac-tured tobacco, excepting snuff, which was sub-jected to a tax of 32 cents per pound. The House sent the Senate a proposition to reduce the tax on all manufactured tobacco to 16 cents per pound. The Senate committee nonconcurred in this, but agreed to reduce it on all except snuff to 16 cents per pound, and on snuff to 24 cents, being a reduction in the

LANSING.

The Legislature Gets to Work in Earnest and Passes Several Important Measures--the Nomination for U.S. Senator--Prof Kedzie on Illuminating Oils-the Agricultural College Opening--a Pleasant Social Event.

From Our Own Correspondent.

LANSING, February 14, 1879. The Legislature reassembled Monday evening, the members returning from their constituents with clearer ideas of the wants of the people, and thus prepared to act more promptly upon the measures brought before them. Several important bills have been passed and committee work has progressed this latter part of the week more rapidly than at any other time during the session.

THE U. S. SENATORSHIP.

On Saturday last Senator Christianey placed his resignation in the hands of the Governor, and immediately upon the convening of the Senate, the Governor transmitted the letter of resignation to that body. A caucus of Republican members of the Legislature was thereupon called to meet Thursday evening in Representative Hall. The caucus met at the appointed time, the floor of the Hall being filled and a large audience appearing in the galleries.

The preliminary canvass disclosed the fact that but two names would be presented to the caucus—those of Hon. Z. Chandler and Hon. John J. Bagley. In the presentation of these names, and in the speeches in which the claims of each were supported, there was an absence of depreciation and inuendo, and a mutual recognition of character and services, very rare on such occasions. A regret seemed to be entertained, on the part of many of the legislators, that they could not vote for the two men. The strong points in the character of each were brought out; due credit was given for services ren-dered by each of the candidates to the State, the Country and the Party; and the contest ended, as it was conducted, with honor to all.

The state of affairs, as presented in national politics, seemed to have much to do with the selection. It was thought that when the solid South represents itself in Congress by the men who led the rebellion, the North must again send its old leaders; fighting men if need be; men who have the courage of their opinions and who will maintain them with vigor in the face of any opposition that may arise.

There was also mingled with this feeling a desire to re-endorse "Old Zach" and amend the record of the Legislature made four years ago. A snows extend further toward the good deal of quiet work was done in this way, long before the Legislature convened, in the primary caucusses and in the conventions.

With these things working in his favor, and the entire party machinery in his hands, it is not to be wondered at that he should secure a large majority. The first informal vote stood 69 for Chandler to 19 for Bagley and one complimentary vote for Senator Palmer of Detroit.

There will be no coalition of Republicans in opposition to the nomination. Mr. Bagley authorized the withdrawal of his name after the first informal pallot and the nomination was made unanimous, apparently without a feeling of dissent.

THE MARQUETTE AND MACKINAC RAIL-ROAD.

The Senate has passed the bill extending the time for completing the Marquette and Mackinac railroad. It had previously passed the House; the Governor has now signed it, and it has become a law. Seldom has so important a measure passed with so little discussion. There seemed to be a general recognition of the desirability of the road and of the value of the business interests it would promote, and this overruled the fear expressed in some quarters that the extension of time would keep the lands out of market and prevent development of the section through which the road will run. It is the understanding that the road will be built at an early day, if not by those who have had it in hand by parties who stand ready to take hold of it and push it rapidly to completion.

PASSED THE COMITTEES. A bill reported back from the Senate committee appropriates $7,000 for each of the years 1879 and 1880, for the expenses of the fish commissioners. This s the same as the two previous years.

The House bill for the Deaf, Dumb and Blind Institute appropriates $41, 000 for each of the years 1879 and 1880 for general expenses, and $6,600 each year for special expenses. ILLUMINATING OILS.

A large number of petitions have been presented for a change in the law regulating the test of Kerosene oil The law as it stands requires a flash test of 140 degrees and a rigid system of inspection. This, it is claimed, adds argely to the cost. It is also claimed that an oil of 120 degrees, as used in Ohio, would possess equal illuminating power and would be nearly as safe.

The experiments of Prof. Kedzie, of the Agricultural College and State Board of Health, have doubtless largely influenced legislation on this subject. The Professor does not champion any policy in the matter, except so far as the experiments and facts point to safety and warn of danger. Statistics show that since the present law has been enforced there have been very few accidents from the use of oil, whereas before the passage of the law, accidents were of frequent occurrence.

Prof. Kedzie claims that it is not the purity of the oil with reference to the flash test that causes any great increase in the price. He himself uses married a Greek lady, and is building a an oil of 300 degrees, that will extinguish the fire of live coals when thrown upon them, and yet this oil costs him but 10 cts per gallon more than the oil commonly sold under the Michigan law. In Ohio the price of oil is about half what it is in Michigan; buyers. Sales were: 17, av 209 lbs, at $4 10; 49, av 262 lbs, at $4; 33, av 221 lbs, at $3 75; 104, av 135 lbs, at $3 30.

but that comes from the fact that there are only three refineries who put up the Michigan grade, and from the further fact that the low grades are more easily adulterated. The people and their representatives, looking at the nearly half a million dollars paid by them for the higher test, seem to be impressed with the idea that a lower est may be safe in careful nands, and it is not unlikely that the law may be amended. Prof. Kedzie wili deliver an address before the Legislature this evening, and will bring before them tests, experiments and facts, which cannot fail to give them clear ideas upon the subject.

THE AGRICULTURAL COLLEGE.

The Spring Term of the Agricultural College will begin Feb. 26th. Three classes. Freshman, Sophomore and Senior, will run through the summer. There will be no Junior class till September 25th. tember, at the opening of the next College year. The indications now are that the attendance will be very full.

Application will be made to the Legislature, and through it, probably, to the U. S. Gov't, for the appointment of an officer, professor, or instructor in military drill and tactics. The law under which the College was organized provides for military instruction, and the good effect of such instruction, in other schools—the discipline, order and manly bearing it imparts—makes it highly desirable that it should be established as a part of the college course.

A BRILLIANT RECEPTION.

The most brilliant social event of the season at the State Capitol this winter was the reception at the residence of Hon. O. M. Barnes Wednesday evening. It was attended by nearly 500 persons, including the Governor and other State officers, many prominent men from other parts of the State, a number of friends from Mason, where Mr. B. formerly resided, and the best of Lansing society. The time chosen was an opportune one for a large gathering. It was the evening preceding the Senatorial caucus, and many prominent men had gathered to the capital to participate in and wilness the canvass. The members of the Legislature had just returned from their homes, and many brought their wives and daughters with them. The honors were done with an ease, grace and dignity which familiarity with good society alone could impart, and every guest seemed to enjoy with great delight the hospitalities and festivities of the occasion.

Prof. Lockyer thinks that human life on the plannete Mars may be very much like human life on the earth. Although the light can not be so bright, yet the organs of sight of the inhabitants may be so much more susceptible as to make their vision quite as good as ours. Probably the heat on Mars is equator, but it is by no means in proportion to the lessened power of solar rays. Several remarkable seas are now definable in the southern hemispheres, where, as in the case of the southern hemispheres of the earth, water covers a much larger area than in the northern hemisphere. One of the sonthern seas of Mars is very like the Baltic in outline. Another sea near the equator is one thousand miles in length and about one hundred in breadth—a long, straggling body of water, pretty much the shape of the letter S laid on its back, stretching from east to west.

AGRICULTURAL CHEMIS-TRY AS APPLIED TO MICHIGAN.

Paper Read by Prof. Kedzie Before the Bay City Institute.

Two years ago, says the Professor, I had a glance at some of these Northern counties during a trip to attend a Farmers Institute at Traverse City. What I then saw awakened an earnest desire to know more. A soil that could bear such magnificent forests and could ripen apples so nicely colored, as if the yellow and red fingers of sunset had grasped the fruit and would not let go-surely such a region and such a sail were worthy of careful study. But the ground was all covered with snow, and all plans of study and 21. investigation must be postponed to a more convenient season. But the desire and the purpose to know more of this section of the State did not die 26. out, and last spring I entered upon the 27. work in good earnest. My object was to direct public attention to the resources and capabilities of that portion of our State which had been overlooked too long for the best interests of the commonwealth.

I could not leave my work at the college to personally examine these new counties, and if I could I would thus satisfy myself instead of convincing others. If I could place before others the means by which they could form an intelligent and just opinion in regard to the agricultural capabilities of these northern counties, I would do the public better service than by any amount of personal examination which could bear no better fruit than personal assertions in respect to this region. I preferred to merely bring the witnesses into court, to examine and crossexamine them there, and leave the public to be judge and jury in the case. It seemed to me that I could best do this by gathering characteristic specimens of soil from as many representative points as possible, submit these to chemical analysis, examine the physical properties and characteristics of these soils, and then present the results of these investigations and the soils themselves to the public and ask an enlightened public opinion to give a verdict in the problems of agriculture, it was supposed that the greatest benfit which chemistry could impart to agriculture was to be derived from the analysis of the soil. It was supposed that the fertility of any soil, the kind of crop it was fitted to raise, or the material which must be added to the soil to develop its greatest productiveness, were each and all to be determined simply by a chemical analysis of the soil. These extravagant anticipations have physical conditions or because the ash not been realized. It is found that elements are not in an available form. chemical analysis will not always distinguish between a fruitful and an unfruitfal soil; because a soil may be unproductive for physical reasons, though it may contain all the chemical elements of fertility. The utter breakdown of Liebig's mineral theory of manures when put to the test of experience rang the knell of mere soil analy-

But if chemical analysis failed when conclude that because it is not good for everything it is good for nothing. Chemical analysis of the soil is of value in determining whether a soil is capable of fertility or the contrary; also in determining the degree of its possible fertility. There are certain elements which are absolutely necessary for plant growth. In the absence of any one of these vegetable growth is impos sible; if the supply is relatively limited, growth will be limited correspondingly. If all the ash elements are present in sufficient amount and in available form, such soil is capable of fertility. Hence the chemical analysis of a soil is of importance in determining the possibility of fertility and of the relative fertility, which may be secured under favorable conditions.

THE ELEMENTS.

You are all familiar with sand, Silica and alumina, when chemically combined, form clay. Oxide of iron is the material which gives the reddish or brownish color to most soils. The great bulk of nearly all soils is made up of sand, clay and oxide of iron. umina is never found in the ash of cultivated plants; a certain amount of silica and oxide of iron is found in the ash of all plants; but the great mass of these materials, as found in the soil, is of no worth in the chemistry of plant life; they are the mechanical agents of the soil, and are of worth mainly from their relations to temperature and moisture and by giving mechanical support to the plants. Their chief office in the is physical, and not chemical. They render the soil light or heavy, porous or retentive. The organic matter of soils, besides furnishing a supply of combined nitrogen, is chiefly valuable for its physical relations to temperature, moisture and porosity of soils.

Leaving out of account the mechanical agents of the soil, which mainly influence the physical conditions of soils, there remain lime, magnesia, potash, soda, the sulphates and phosphates. While these substances make up the larger part of the ash of all cultivated plants. They are necessary conditions of plant growth; in their absence no plant can grow; when they are present in very limited amount plant growth hold: one hundred parts of carbonate is correspondingly limited, but when they are present in sufficient quantity and in available form, if the physical conditions of the soil and the climate are favorable, any crop can be grown and brought to perfect maturity. They are the chemical agents of plant growth. In the entire absence of either lime or magnesia, or potash, or sulphates or phosphates, no plant can grow, much less mature its seed.

ASH ELEMENTS.

In studying the results of chemical analysis of the soil, we should fix our attention mainly upon these indispensable ash elements of plant growth. In the following table I omit the mechanical agents of the soil, and present only the sum of ash elements contained in one hundred parts of soil:

1. River Raisin bottom lands, cultivated 3. Burr-oak wheat land, saline.......
4. Prairie soil, never plowed, Cass Co....

It we reject from the list the exceptionally rich bottom lands of the Raisin (1 and 2), and of the Tittibawassee (9) and the exceptionally poor land (10, 13, 15 and 24), taking the average of the burr-oak land of Washtenaw county and the prairie soils of Cass county as a basis of comparison (4.43) we find that the average of all the rest of the soils in this list differs from this high standard of soil excellence by only 58 hundredths of one per cent. All the soils of this list (with the four exceptions) contain a large excess of ash elements beyond the requirements of any crop that may grow upon it. Soil No. 1 from River Raisin bottoms has been cultivated forty years without manure, yet in 1876 it produced $3 bushels of shelled corn to the acre.

POTASH.

In the case of the four exceptional soils while the relative amount of ash materials seems small, the absolute amount to the acre is large. Take No. 10, which is the lowest in the list, having only 1.55 per cent of ash elements; fix your eye upon potash 54 and phosphoric acid 15 per cent., these substances being most important in the production of cereal crops; we find that an acre of this soil taken to the depth When chemistry was first applied to of 12 inches contains 10,800 pounds of potash and 4,000 pounds of phosphoric acid; yet 30 bushels of wheat remove less than 22 pounds of potash and 34 pounds of phosphoric acid. It will thus be seen that even the poorest of these soils cannot be called chemically barren, because they contain all the necessary ash elements of plants and in quantities sufficient to sustain remunerative crops. If they are unfruit ful it must be because of unfavorable RELATION OF THE SOIL TO WATER. One prime condition of vegetable growth is water. No matter what the chemical composition of a soil or what its physical properties, nothing can grow upon it in the absence of water. so controlling is its influence that the Bible often speaks of an unfailing supply of water as the leading condition of vegetable growth. "And he shall be so much was demanded of it, we are water, that bringeth forth his fruit in like a tree planted by the rivers of to the other extreme and his season; his leaf also shall not with er; whatsoever he doeth shall prosper. The "Great Sahara" is a desert from any peculiarity of the soil but mainly from want of water. This imperative need of water to sustain vegetable life is not confined to tropical regions but is felt through every zone of cultivation. Even where water is present in sufficient quantity to sustain life we find that fruitfulness is increased by abundant and well distributed rains. A dry year means short crops in temperate climates and famine in tropical climes. The relations of the water of the soil to the production of crops may be considered under three heads. 1. The amount and distribution of rain. 2. Capacity of the soil to retain water. 3. The approach of the water line to the surface of the soil.

RAINFALLS.

If we could obtain reliable statisticts of the amount of rainfall in these new counties and of the distribution of the rain through the months of the year, they would furnish one very valuable means of determining their agricultural capabilities; but such statistics are almost entirely wanting.

The power of soils to take up and retain moisture bears an important relation to their fertility, because this capacity to imbibe and hold water is one very important condition of their withstanding the influence of prolonged absence of rain. Soils differ greatly from eachother in this respect; in the same district and under the same conditions in regard to rainfall we find that one soil will withstand the influence of dry weather and keep its crops green and vigorous, while the crops on a neighboring soil will be parched and burned under the same conditions of weather.

The capacity of soil to hold water is influenced both by its chemical composition and by the fineness of its divis-Humus, or the vegetable matter of the soil, will retain the most water. Clay and the oxide of iron found in soils stand next, while sand stands lowest on the list. The more finely a soil is divided, the more water it will af lime in the form or sand will only hold twenty-nine parts of water, but in the form of fine powder will hold eighty-five parts, or nearly three times as much as the coarse material. I have examined these Michigan soils with reference to their capacity to hold water, regarding this as one very important criterion by which to pronounce upon their agricultural capabilities. I thus aim to make the soils so characteristic of the strong and en- made in my profession.

soils were dried at 212 degrees Fahrenheit till they ceased to lose weight, all stones and roots were picked out and all lumps broken down, but the soil was not pulverized or reduced to a finer state of division than was found in their natural state. One hundred grammes of the soil were weighed out, placed in a tarred glass funnel, and water poured over the soil till it was comtirred or puddled in the least; it was take up and hold under natural conditions the water which falls upon them in the form of rain or snow, and thus shows their relative resources against periods of impending drought. For purposes of comparison I include in this list soil from "the pine barrens" of New Jersey, and from "the plains" of Kalkaska, Baldwin and Walton Junetion:

COMMENTS.

It seems to me that such an exami, nation of soils with reference to their waterholding capacity is valuable beup all it will hold and then determine its amount. The results are very instructive and significant. The soil of the sterile pine barrens of New Jersey stands lowest in this list, taking up only 25.60 per cent. of water; then fol-32.40, Kalkaska 33.10, and Webber These soils are characterized by a deficiency of organic matter except the soil of Kalkaska. On the other hand the soils in the whole list which contain the most organic matter also have the greatest capacity to hold water; for example the prairie soils of Cass county, and the River Raisin bottom lands, that will hold from 61 to 73 per cent. of water, contain from 7.50 to 12.30 per cent. of organic matter.

On looking over the thirty-one soils which have been analyzed, and comparing the mass of these northern counties with those in the southern part of the State in the matter of their capacity to hold water, we find no evilence brought out by this test, which would lead us to question the agricultural capabilities of the mass of soil in these counties. Compare these lands with the wonderful wheat lands, the burr-oak plains of Washtenaw county and you observe that only two out of the thirty-one specimens analyzed which fall below the burr-oak lands in their capacity to imbibe and retain

THE WATER LINE.

If we dig down in the ground we usually find a level in which water is present in such quantity that it will flow into the hole. The highest level in the soil in which water will flow is called the water line. It is not a fixed level, but fluctuates with the season. Some call the surface of the water in a well the water line, but there may be levels above the well water which will afford flowing water, but not in sufficient quantity to permanently raise the level of water in the well, in which case the water line would obviously be above the water level in the well.

The physical condition of a soil will be greatly affected by fluctuations in the water line; when it comes very near the surface we have a swamp; when it is only one to two feet from the surface, coarse wild grasses or sedges predominate; when it is from four to ten feet from the surface we have the best conditions of fertility. It is to lower the water-line that the farmer resorts to tile-draining, the benefits of which are too well known to be dwelt on here.

Plants derive most of their water from the capillary water of the soilwater held by capillary attraction, that makes the soil moist, but will not flow out of the soil by the force of gravity. But it is found that most plants under favorable circumstances will send a few roots as water-feeders to the free water in the soil in order to provide a supply when capillary water is deficient; thus beets, turnips, and many kinds of trees will often throw such quantities of roots into tile drains as to obstruct them entirely. It is often found that the roots of plants will extend to surprising depths to reach the water-line to secure the means for this provisional supply of water. It is obvious that the plant will be in a better condition when the water-line is within a moderate distance from the surface.

Not long ago, in a neighboring city one of the belles of society accepted the matrimonial proposition of a worthy young gentleman, and was asked 61.20 by him to name the happy day. Fashionable society encourages and patronizes this fashionable rascality. sin which fashionable society will never forgive is poverty—even though that poverty is the result of unflinch ing honesty. A prominent Boston merchant—an ex-Governor of Massachusetts—has hanging in his countingroom a photographic portrait under which is written, "An Honest Man." The honest man thus honored had simply paid his debts in full, after having been compelled to compromise them at a heavy discount. The ex-Governor insisted that the hero of such a remarkable deed should have his picture taken. So taken it was, and there it hangs -a sad commentary upon the rarity of that old-time virtue: Honesty.

NEW YORK NOTES.

To-day is the eighty-ninth birthday of Mr. Peter Cooper, and his daughter, Mrs. Abram S. Hewitt, has issued cards for a reception to-night at her house in celebration of the event, where many a guest will have an opportunity of repeating what Mr. Henry G. Stebbins, President of the old Arcadian Club, said five years ago, when Mr. Cooper met the club by invitation: "We commemorate the birthday of a citizen whom not only all New York, but all the country would unite with us in honoring were there any way by which our people could mingle their expressions with our own." That Mr. Stebbins was entirely correct in this statement, and that five years have not done for Mr. Cooper what four years so often do for other distinguished men in this country, but have left his portrait as clean and pleasant to look at as ever, was clearly proved—if indeed it needed proof—by the result of a Ritschy and James L. Byrnes on Monday night as he was leaving the Theatre Comique. The burglary of the Manhattan Bank was the most audacious and successful that was ever committed in this country. It was planned months ahead by the most expert thieves, and carried out with every chance against capture or dentification. One singular fact about the case is that, although none of the burglars were arrested until Monday night, it is claimed by the police that the right men were suspected within 24 hours after the robbery had been committed, and that they were constantly sought after, but they succeeded in evading arrest. After the robbery had occurred, Inspector Dilks, Inspector Murray, and Capt. Byrnes, of the Fifteenth Precinct, considered the situation thoroughly, and the matter was placed in Capt. Byrnes' hands, the bank being located in the precinct. Capt. Byrnes studied all the details of the affair that could be learned, and concluded that there were but six men in the country who could have "put up the job," and that whoever had put it up must have worked the principal part of it, viz., tearing off the heavy safe door from the outside with a jimmy and ratchet. This was done within 30 minutes, and it would be difficult to convince any well-informed detective that there are more than six burglars living who could have done it. When this conclusion was reached, the next thing to do was to locate each of the six probable men during the hours occurred. One by one they were placed until five of them were accounted for elsewhere. The other could not be placed, and suspicion fastened upon him. That was Jimmy Hope, partner of such men as Jim Brady and the equal of them at bank robberies. When he was singled out, evidence was carefully sought and analyzed, and all that was learned con-

All the great temples of Egypt that have withstood the destructive tendencies of time and the assaults of man for 4,000 years are of hewn stone. But the only wood in or about them is in the form of ties, holding the end of one stone to another on its upper surface. When two blocks were laid in place, then it appears that an excavation about an inch deep was made in each block, into which an hour-glass-shaped tie was driven. It is therefore very difficult to force any stone from its position. The ties appear to have been the tamarisk, or chittim wood, a sacred tree in ancient Egypt, and now very rarely found in the valley of the Nile. Those dovetail ties are just as sound now as on the day of their insertion.

THE NEW REGENTS.

The recent action of the Regents has excited throughout the State the indignation it deserves. It is well known who is to blame for the action, and there is a growing determination to wrest the control of the University from a man who is at present the let. power behind the throne. That determination will manifest itself in the next selection of Regents. If the Republican party has any hope of electing its candidates, those candidates must be known to be men who have at heart the good of the University rather than their own political advancement. If the Republican party shall fail, at the coming State convention, to nominate such men, it will receive, and it will deserve defeat.

In all probability neither of the out going Regents will be a candidate for re-electypes, etc. tion, and the utmost care should be taken SATISFACTION GUARANTEED in the selection of the new candidates. The first qualification should be that the nominees are graduates of the University. The list of Michigan University alumni is long enough to furnish many a name that stands for intellectual vigor and uncompromising integrity, and it is time that an unwritten law to the effect that only graduates should be eligible to nomination, was observed by both parties. Certain it is that the fact of being an alumnus is a most effective barrier against such assaults as a Regent is called upon to withstand. The other qualification is a character that has been long enough before the people to make plain the fact of its integrity. It is needless to say that men of pronounced political aspirations should not apply.

It is easy enough to say that a State convention ought to do thus and so, thereby casting the responsibility on to the snoulders of others. The burden, however, is not to be so easily shifted. It is the duty of the county convention to send delegates who will nominate true men at the State convention, and it is the duty of city and town conventions to send the right sort of men to the county convention; and especially it is every man's duty to see that the delegates to the county convention represent fully and GOOD BARGAINS without compromise the principles for which he himself is contending. Usually a city convention is made up chiefly of men whose only occupation in life seems to be to kill time. With such men any nomination is a good one, and the active politician has little difficulty in obtaining any end he seeks. At the next city convention tet the Republicans who believe that the University is suffering disgrace, and that the politics of the State are in danger of falling into the hands of selfish, scheming men-in a word, let all good Republican citizens see to it that Ypsilanti is represented at Ann Arbor by men who believe in the welfare of our educational institutions, and government of the people, by the people, and for the people.

THE COUTHOUI READINGS.

Guard Hall was as enthusiastic as could be desired, and each of Miss Couthoui's numbers met with deserved applause, encores being insisted upon in two instances. Her dramatic power was plainly evident in every selection; the more effectively because of the entire naturalness and truth of her impersonations and the complete absence of rant and over-doing, so often seen upon the elocutionary stage. Miss Couthoui has great aptness and fidelity in her imitations of children and old people, and though there are some slight points of good taste in which she might improve, a longer study and experience will, without doubt, correct and make her recitations still more perfect iny as they have not before been intro than at present. Should it prove true, as has been rumored, that the Mission Circle way to fill an engagement in Detroit, she will doubtless be as enthusiastically received as before. The interspersed music was acceptable to the audience. Misses Barr and Joslin gave Mendelssohn's "Autumn Song" with much sweetness and grace, and Mr. Wm. Kimball sang an air of Mozart's, which was well received, while Mrs. Moore was

FASHIONABLE FOOLISHNESS,

There is no modern fashionable notion quite so absurd as the generally received idea that to be beautiful and attractive a woman must possess a wan, spiriteulle face and a fig-ure of sylph-like proportions—a fragility in nine cases out of ten the result of disease. By many fashionable belles it is considered a special compliment to be spoken of as frail and delicate. They forget that the naturally delicate face and petite figure are very different from the pale and diseasestricken faces that meet us in the city thoroughfares, look out from the luxuriant carriages of wealth, and glide languidly through our crowded drawing rooms. If disease were unfashionable, as it ought to be, not a ady in the land but would take every possible precaution to secure the fresh, ing face and well rounded figure that only health can give. Ladies should remember that much as gentlemen may profess to ad-mire the face and form paled and emaciated by disease, when they choose a wife they prefer a blooming, healthful, buoyant-spir-ited woman. Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescrip-tion is the acknowledged standard remedy for female diseases and weaknesses. It has the two-fold advantage of curing the local Call on us. disease and imparting a vigorous tone to the whole system. It is sold by druggists.

The Cooley Creamer.

ED. COMMERCIAL. - Having as I think fully tested the Cooley Process, of cream raising and butter-making, which I began experimenting with in October last, I desire to call the attention of all who are inter ested in the dairy business to the great util-ity of this the age—destined to have a place in every well regulated dairy in the country. The fact that cream may be raised in twelve hours, all of it, and the very little space occupied in setiting the milk, also that more butter and a very much better quality is produced, are facts which the public at large are interested in, and rightly so. The constant labor arising from setting milk in pans is all saved. This of itself ought to recommend it to the attention of every farmer's wife in the country. I would be glad to awaken an interest in this invention until every household in the land may reap the benefit of this wonderful labor-saving process of cream raising and butter making. Very telling facts are these, in confirmation of what is claimed for this invention. The what is claimed for this invention. The HIGGINS SWEEPSTAKES PREMIUM OF $250.00 given for the best butter made by any factory or dairy in the United States, was awarded to Hiram Smith of Shekawara awarded to Hiram Smith of Sheboygan, at the International Dairy Fair, Dec. 18, 1878, for butter made by the Cooley process. There were eighty packages to contend with, and Mr. Smith felt the test to be a severe one. He asserts that it was made strictly after the Cooley system,—in no case the milk standing longer than between milkings,—and he adds, "In no case would I go back to the old system of butter-making; I could not afford the increased labor, and accept the decreased price that common dairy butter sells for." At the same Fair, John S. Murray, Delhi, N. Y., was awarded the First Premium of $125.00 for the best butter made in New York State. This butter was also by made the Cooley process. Samples of the butter made in June were on exhibition in fine condition, showing there is no question as to its keeping qualities. The Cooley Creamer, will pay for itself every sixty day, summer and winter,

POPULAR AMUSEMENTS.

SERMON PREACHED BY THE REV. JOHN M RICHMOND, IN THE PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH, SUNDAY EVE'NG, FEB. 9, 1879.

ECCLES. 11:9—Rejoice, O young man, in thy outh; and let thy heart cheer thee in the days of thy outh, and walk in the ways of thy heart, and in the ight of thine eyes; but know thou, that for all these hings God will bring thee into judgment.

I have been requested to speak on the subject of popular amusements. This request has been repeatedly urged, and comes not from one source only but from many From those who desire to be guided aright n this matter, as well as from those who have seen the evil results to which amusements sometimes lead, and who feel the need of the pulpit raising its voice to warn of the dangers. I make this statement to show that in speaking of this subject to-night I am not alone in feeling its importance and the great need of something being done to warn the unwary of the snares which are spread under the garb of innocent amusements, and to check the worldly tendencies of the church. I have hesitated to take up this subject heretofore, as a dismatter. So that I have nothing new to of-fer—no new gospel to preach—nothing but what I have told you a hundred times before. I can only emphasize what I have told you often.

The subject is a difficult one to treat sucrect teaching on this subject. There are subjects upon which the Bible utters direct and emphatic declarations; such as "Thou shall not kill," "Thou shall not steal," "Swear not at all;" but as to what amusements are innocent and what are sinful, the Bible gives us no direct command, or as to read.

Now to our subject. What are some of the so-called popular amusements? Cards, dancing and theatre-going. There may be many more which might properly come under this head, but I confess to my ignorance of such things. However, these are sufficient for my present purpose. I leave out of consideration for the present any use of those about which there can be no doubt, such as gaming for money. No one who those about which there can be no doubt, such as gaming for money. No one who professes christianity, or sets up any claim to morality or even to respectability, will, I trust, advocate the propriety of gambling

Let us then calmly weigh the case. Dancing, card-playing and theatre-going are amusements in which many indulge who amusements in which many indulge who than that we do not stand over him because he is sick of this disease rather than that we do not stand over him less than the less than that we do not stand over him less than the less th

Then the question arises, can we find any amusements, or anything else, that have not been abused or nade an evil of, or that is incapable of such their living cargoes at once into a watery abuse? This is a question which is not a flippant one, for if we shut down on certain amusements, we must be prepared to offer something else as substitutes. Where, then, will we find anything which may not be made as productive of evil as any of these? Apparently there is nothing more innocent than the spotted card. Dancing is an old and time honored institution; I know not what could take its place. I once heard, on the floor of the Presbytery, a man say, in condemning dancing, that he enjoyed get-This is a question which is not a grave and an unending eternity.

It is usually a popular subject, and it has appeared to me to be so because men are more anxious to ascertain how far religious teaching can be asserted with truth upon the most can be a ascertain how tar religious teaching can be made to excuse their practices and indulgences, that they are to be guided aright. Although I have not specially treated of this subject, I have in my endeavors to declare "the whole counsel of God" laid down again and again the principles which must guide every man who will do right in this matter. So that I have nothing new to of matter. So that I have nothing new to of the asserted with truth upon the most candid and rational state of the case, that amusements and relaxations being in a high degree necessary to the human mind, as well as to the harmony and continuance of cultivated society, play, considered merely as an amusement or relaxation, or pursued only as such, can never be criminal, is in the principles which must guide every man who will do right in this matter. So that I have nothing new to of those who have been ruined through the influence of popular amusements have engaged in them in a prayerful spirit? SPEECHES

Of the Candidates at the Republican Senatorial Caucus.

Mr. Chandler said:

Mr. PRESIDENT AND GENTLEMEN OF THE CONVENTION: For the high honor which you have this night conferred upon me, in making me your choice to represent you in the Senate of the United States, you have my most profound thanks and gratitude. Words fail to express the emotions of my heart. And yet, gentlemen, I do not attribute this token of your regard to anything personal in myself, but rather to the principles that I have had the honor to advocate, in common with yourselves, during the last two decades. am not here, gentleman of the convention and Mr. Chairman, to apologize for or to explain anything that I have ever said or ever done in a public ca-[Applause.] My record is made, and there it stands open to the world; and this I say—this I have a right to say—that never, during the whole of my political career in the Senate of the United States, have I uttered a setiment or cast a vote that I would alter, explain or change in any regard. [Applause.] We are all liable to err, and I, with others, undoubtedly erred: but I will say this, in my own vindication, that never have I cast a vote, and never have I uttered a sentiment in the halls of the Senate that I would not to-morrow cast and utter under similar and exactly the same circumstances.

Mr. Chairman, it may be proper, and I may say highly proper, that I should make a very brief review of the events with which, in the past, we have been connected. The Republican party, to which we all belong, and which we all love, revere and reverence, was born in Michigan nearly a quarter of a century ago. I saw the birth of the infant was present at its baptism. It was an infant derided by its Demoeratic opponents, and derided by fossils of the old Whig party, then defunct. It was a party with one idea, substantially, when first it was born, and that idea was an idea that covered a continent. It was that the vast territories of these United States, large enough to create 10 empires in Europe, should be forever devoted to freedom, freemen, free thought, free speech and the free exercise of republican institutions. This party grew until in 1857 the onslaught became fearful and dreadful. It was fought in the Congress of the United States. When I entered that body there were 20 Republicans to 44 Democrats—and may their names ever be revered—stood with those Republicans for free territories—Douglass of Illin-ois, Broderick, of California, and our own Chas. E. Stuart, of Michigan. They fought with us, shoulder to shoulder, till that contest was ended and victory perched upon the banners of Anon the years rolled on, and, in 1860, the lamented and revered Abraham Lincoln was selected President of the United States, and again the hydra-headed monster, slavery, raised its head and proclaimed that no man who loved freedom and hated slavery should be inaugurated President of the United States. The people ordained that he should be President of the United States, and the war broke out war that ever cursed the earth. The nation was ill-prepared for the war. Her forces were scattered all over the vast territories of the United States and her fleets were scattered wherever the winds of Heaven blow and water is found. Her credit was ruined, her arms destroyed or scattered or given to the enemy. We were in no condition whatever to enter into that contest; and there is where the Republican party grappled with the monster, grappled in deadly struggle for life. The nation poured out its blood like water that the nation might live. Her people offered themselves by the thousands, and hundreds of thousands, aye, by millions, and the great question was, how shall these men be fed and clothed, and the munitions of war furnished, to carry that fearful strife on. The wealth of the land was poured at our feet till there was no more wealth to pour, and, in the progress of time, we found that we were in debt some forty or fifty millions of dollars. Our soldiers were in arrears of pay for many months and not one single dollar in the treasury to meet immediate demands. And then the government, in the extremity, appealed to the nation whether or no the war should cease, and the national life cease, or whether the people of this great land would come to the rescue of the nation and its flag. They said: "We have no money. Will you trust us for the necessary supplies to carry on this war? Will you give us provisions to feed your soldiers in the field, and that campaign, as I have take our obligations that we will pay said over and over again, that I never as soon as we are able to pay? And, did a thing, wrote a line, sent a diswith one voice, from one end of the patch, either cipher or in the English land, to the other, came up the response: "Take all we have, give us your obligations, and we will trust you. Carry on the war, and save the nation!" And we did carry on the war to a successful issue, and we did save

During the war we had no friends on earth. All the governments of the earth desired and earnestly prayed little Switzerland alone was with us in our fearful struggle. We had neither friends nor allies elsewhere on earth, but we conquered; and after we had conquered, the nations of the earth the repudiation of the balance. A said: "These men will fight; they have shown that they will fight; they have shown it in the Mexican war, and in the present war; but they will never pay their debts. Men who vote taxes | the rebels will have captured—when I national honor." And during the years northern men who occupy seats in the following you have heard repudiation Senate and House—but what I do

Republican party and the War Democrats came up as one man and put heir feet upon repudiation in any and every form. [Applause.] Your bonds were selling in 1865, and bringing 6 per cent. principal and interest payable in coin, for 60 cents on the dollar. But gradually they advanced till your six per cent. bonds were above par, and you issued five per cents; and the five per cents have come above par, and then you issued four and a half per cents; and your four and a halfs came above par, and then you issued four per cents and you have gone on till to-day the credit of the United States of America stands higher than the credit of any other nation on the face of God's earth—[applause] —thanks to the honor and faith of the Republican party of these United States. You have shown to the world that the national honor is as dear to you as the national life, and so the world to-day understands it.

And yet, notwithstanding all this. notwithstanding all that you have done it is said by some that your mission is ended, and that the Republican party ought to die. Why ought the Repub ican party to die? [applause]—a party that took your nation when it was in the very depths of humiliation, when your credit did not exist, when your bonds, bearing 6 per cent. interest payable in one year, principal and interest in coin, were held for 87 cents on the dollar; and now the Republican party has raised it until your 4 per cent. bonds. running 30 years, are caught up to-day at the rate of $8,000,000 a day, and very soon there will be no 6 per cent. bonds out, and no 5 per cents. and no 4½ per cents, and you will have your whole national debt funded into 4 per cents, and the credit of this government stands higher, as I have said, than the credit of any other govern-ment on earth. Yet, you ought to die! Why, fellow citizens, the Republican party has accomplished more, in the short quarter of a century of its existence, than any other political party that ever existed on earth in 10 centuries. [Applause.] You have not only saved from the blighting curse of slavery all those vast territories, but you have abolished slavery throughout your whole land. You have fulfilled every pledge ever given to the people of the United States, and I defy the worst enemy of the Republican party to name a single unfulfilled pledge to day it ever gave. The last pledge ever given, that pledge that was given by you when in extremities, when you asked the nation to trust you and pledged your fortunes and your sacred honor that at the very moment when you were able you would pay this vast debt in the coin of the realm, on the that pledge! [Applause.] What is more, it came to stay. [Applause.]

Now, fellow-citizens, the Republican party has no idea of dying. It has made other arrangements. [Great laughter and applause.] Its record is too good; it has accomplished too much The mission of the Republican party s not ended. It will not be ended until the rights of every man, the rights of every American citizen, shall be respected upon every inch of territory of these United States [applause], until you and I can go to South Carolina, go to Mississppi, go to Louisiana, and utter our sentiments as freely and as safely, and cast our votes as peaceably, as quitely as the rebels can utter their sentiments here, and cast their votes in peace and quiet.

One thing more, fellow-citizens. I deny, and all the oaths of all the men on earth cannot make me believe, that a rebel is better than a loyal man. [Applause.] And yet to-day there are the House of Representatives in Washington, representing no constituency whatever, in violation of law. To-day a rebel soldier in South Carolina casts a vote worth just two-and-a-half of the votes of a Union soldier in the Union army to the close of the war. [Applause.] The white population is less than the black by about that ratio. And yet the black man is as absolutely disfranchised as though he were the resident of another sphere, and the law says that where any class are disfranchised they shall not be represented on the floor of Congress; and yet there they are. The rebel who fought against the flag counts more than two loyal men who fought for your flag among our Michigan troops during the war of the rebellion. This state of things ought not to be, must not and shall not be. [Applause.] Fellow citizens, a great deal has been said about fraud. [Laughter.] I suppose you have heard the term fraud. fraud! I had the honor of having a little something to do with the election of 1876. [Laughter and applause.] It was an election on one side of fraud and violence; and without any exception, and I say it deliberately and after mature consideration, that the greatest fraud, in my judgment, that ever was seen on the earth was Samuel J. Tilden. [Applause.] As I have said, I ran that campaign to a certain extent. I was chairman of the committee, and they howled fraud, fraud, fraud! There was fraud, but on the other side. Now I wish to say, said over and over again, that I never patch, either cipher or in the English language or in any other way, that I would not be glad to see in print tomorrow morning in all the Democratic papers of these United States. [Applanse.

Then in the campaign of 1878 we had a solid south, solid for the repudiation of our national debt, made solid by murder and outrage, by shot-guns and whips. It is solid for robbing the that our national life might cease, and treasury of the United States for the payment of untold millions of rebel claims against the Government, and it is solid, after getting all it can from the treasury of the United States, for solid south for those objects means a solid north to thwart those objects. [Applause.] And I predict, that although, after the 4th day of March, upon themselves will not maintain the say rebels I mean no disrespect to the majority in the Democratic caucus of both Houses, and a majority in the caucus controls a Democratic Congress. I care not who you send there to co-operate with the Democratic party of the south, he is controlled, and must be controlled, by rebel influences; and I predict, my fellow-citizens, that whether you nominate for your standard bearer in 1880 the man who they didn't love and did hate, and yet dear to the United States—Grant [prolonged applause]-or whether you nominate that gallant standard bearer Blaine, of Maine [great applause], or whether you nominate John Sherman, the present Secretary of the Treasury [mild applause], that you and I will march houlder to shoulder to rescue from the grasp of rebel generals and rebel brigadiers the capital of the nation.

Fellow citizens, again thanking you for the high honor you have conferred apon me, I wish you, one and all, that eaven's blessing may rest upon you. [Great and long continued applause].

Ex-Gov. Bagley said:

My FRIENDS-I want to say that I ove the state of Michigan; I want to say too that I love the Republican party of the state of Michigan. The first vote I ever cast in my life was for that party. The last vote I cast was for that party. In it is my home, in it is my life, and in it is my heart, and I am glad always to be with Republicans when they get together in council for any purpose whatever; and I bring to the altar of Republicanism, always and at all times, and in all places, every personal ambition, every personal nope that I have in this life of mine. believe in the Republican party of the past, I believe in the Republican party of to-day, and I have the most abundant faith and abiding hope in the Republican party of the future. Great applause.] It is as necessary to you and to me, it is as necessary to us in Michigan, it is as necessary to the better interests of the men of the South to-day as it ever was. Its ideas, its theories, its examples are needed all over the South. The example Repub licanism gives to Michigan of good government, the example of Republicanism as it is in the state of Michigan of education and civilization, of confidence and belief in our ideas, is needed to-day all over this Union, and the Re publican party can never die. It never will die. Parties never do die—they occasionally commit suicide, but they die in no other way, and we cannot til our mission and our duty and the demands of the time and day are all fulfilled, to the very brim of the cup.

We need to carry into the South today the ideas that have made Michigan blossom like the rose. Our ideas of first day of January, 1879, you fulfilled education, our ideas of freedom, espethat pledge! [Applause.] What is cially our ideas of freedom of thought cially our ideas of freedom of thought and of vote and of doing our daily work, want to be sent all over this land—and our mission is not done today-it will not be done in all the centuries that are to come until these things are accomplished. We need in the South, and to the South, and to all the people everywhere to say that the ideas of the North must prevail. The ideas that our Puritan fathers brought with them to our shores have got to govern and control this country. The thought, to me, is the thought of two civilizations contending, and strongest, and the purest, and the sweetest and best has got to govern. This is the thought we want to carry in my judgment, into the South. We want to say to them: you must educate all your people; you must protect your people in every right, having first educated and fitted them for their rights. If the state will not do it then the General Government ought, and the General Government ought to see that any law, any state act, in subversion of the nation's will and the nation's power, shall be put under our feet forever.

The miserable heresy of State rights now lifts up its head again all over this land. We fought the war through, but without squelching, without burying beyond every chance of resurrec tion, that miserable heresy that some day or other, if perpetuated and put in power, would divide us once more into a mere rope of sand.

We want to see to it, in the Senate and House of Representatives, in all our public actions and in all places where we have powers, that these ideas of education and universal suffrage and the right of every man to cast his vote as he sees fit, and in his own way become the law of the land, not only in Michigan, but in South Carolina, in Mississippi, as well as in Maine and Massachusetts. This is the mission of our party, the party that you and I are so proud to place our belief and faith and hope in. I would see to it, by legislation and then by executive force joined to legislation, that the man who laid the lightest finger upon the crookedest hair of the baldest headed African citizen in the whole South should be punished—[applause]—that the negro should be able to walk to the polls, to churches, to schools, in the full liberty of an American citizen as much as you and I and all of us. And this is why you and I and all of us are Republicans to-day. It has made us Republicans in the past, it will keep us and our children and our children's children Republicans in the future. This is the mission, this is the duty. this is the errand of the Republican party, and we here and the representatives we send to Washington, and the representatives we send to represent us everywhere, I know and feel, will have with them the power and strength and belief of every Republican in the state of ours.

I am very much obliged to you all for your very kind compliment to me. I am obliged personally for very many favors from the Republican party of Michigan. They have been better to me than I ever deserved, but after all it is the Republican party that has made me, that has made you, that has made Michigan, that has made freedom and education and belief in our ideas the keystone, the corner-stone of this government that we love so much. Good-night.

If the next State Fair offers a prize for full-blooded scape-goats, Pelton will get it by acclamation and a rising department opened in 1859 with ninetalked all over all the land. But the mean to say is that the rebels are a vote of the entire continent.

THE OBSERVATORY.

But the branch which has carried the fame of the University to the remotest corners of the earth, is the astronomical observatory. It has been exceptionally fortunate in its management and has given remarkably rich results in scientific discovery.

The first suggestion of an observatory in connection with the University was made by Dr. Tappan in his inaugural address as Chancellor, in 1852. At a meeting held in Detroit a few days afterwards the Chancellor again urged the project with such success that Gen. Cass, Hon. H. N. Walker, Senator Chandler and Governor Baldwin headed a subscription for the pur-Chancellor then made arrangements with Mr. Henry Fitz, of New York, for a first-class telescope to cost $6,000, and then visited the principal observatories of Europe where he procured an outfit of astronomical instruments. Mr. Walker further proved his love for science by paying out of his own pocket $4,000 for a meridian circle. The building which is on an eminence one hundred and fifty feet above the Huron river and at a considerable distance northeast of the Campus, was completed in time for the reception of the instruments in 1854. Its original cost was about $15,000, nearly all subscribed by citizens of Detroit and Ann Arbor. Dr. Brunnow, of the Royal Observatory at Berlin, was chosen first director of the new observatory, enterng on the discharge of his duties in July, 1854, and being succeeded in 1863 by Prof. J. C. Watson. Numerous additions have been made both to the building and its outfit, and it is safe to say, the reputation of the observatory for good work is second to none in the

PRESENT STATUS.

The growth of the University as a whole has been remarkable and reflects great credit on the forsight of ts founders and the generous appreciation of the public. The annual calendar just issued shows the total number of students in attendance to be 1,372, being considerably more than at any other university or college in the country in America. Of this number 441 are in the literary department, 406 in the law, 329 in the medical, 71 in pharmacy, 68 in Homeopathic College, and 62 in the Dental School. Nearly one-half or 661 are residents of Michigan, 131 from Ohio, 100 from New York, 94 from Illinois, 81 from Indiana, 66 from Pennsylvania and smaller numbers from nearly every other State and Territory in the Union, while eight foreign countries are represented. All the departments except the literary are self-supporting and it is hoped that will soon be self-supporting also. The success of such an institution should be a subject for congratulation to the whole State.

Farm Yard Song.

BY J. T. TROWBRIDGE.

Over the hill the farm-boy goes. Over the full the farm-boy goes.

His shadow lengthens along the land,
A giant staff in a giant hand;
In the poplar tree above the spring,
The katydid begins to sing;
The early dews are falling;

Into the stone heap darts the mink; The swallows skim the river's brink; And home to the woodland fly the crows, When over the hill the farm-boy goes,

Cheerily calling,—
"Co', boss! co', boss! co'! co'!" Farther, farther, over the hill, Faintly calling, calling still,— "Co', boss! co', boss! co! co!"

Now to her task the milkmaid goes The cattle come crowding through the gate, Lowing, pushing, little and great; About the trough by the farmyard pump, The frolicsome yearlings frisk and jump, While the placeant down are falling.

While the pleasant dews are falling; The new-milch heifer is quick and shy, But the old cow waits with tranquil eye; And the white stream into the bright pail

When to her task the milkmaid goes, Soothingly calling,—
"So, boss! so, boss! so! so!"
The cheerful milkmaid takes her stool,
And sits and milks in the twilight cool,
Soving "So! so hard!"

Saying, "So! so, boss! so! so! To supper at last the farmer goes. The apples are pared, the paper read, The stories are told, then all to bed. Without the cricket's ceaseless song Makes shrill the silence all night long;

The heavy dews are falling.
The housewife's hand has turned the lock;
Drowsily ticks the kitchen clock;
The household sinks to deep repose;

But still in sleep the farmboy goes
Singing, calling,
"Co', boss! co', boss! co'! co'!"
And oft the milkmaid, in her dreams,
Drums in the pail with the flashing streams,
Murmuring, "So, boss! so!"

THE ENSIGN'S SECRET.

From the Argosy.

Nearly sixty years ago, a young man came out of a little house at the eastern end of a town by the sea. There was plenty of life and gayety at the other end of the town, which was enlivened by one or two barracks, a fort and a castle. But the eastern end was very poor, and would have been quite lonely but for the fishermen and their boats. The house from which the young man came was beyond even this homely bustle, and was little more than a wooden hut, tarred to defend it from wind and weather. Its only near neighbor was a windmill, whose gaunt arms were almost over its humble roof; and, through its windows and doorstep were clean and its curtains white, it was clearly a very poor place, where none but very poor people would live.

But the young man who came out was in full dress of a military officer. though that was screened from first view by the long gray cloak which the wild March wind made so necessary. He looked back and waved his hand toward the little house, as if he knew that somebody there was watching him, though, certainly, nobody could be seen from the outside. And then he turned and struggled against the strong gale which blew in from the

He was quite young, and his face was finely cut, and would have been pleasant but for a look of stern and painful sorrow, not unmixed with bitterness, which seemed strangely incongruous with his years and his dress.

He walked on quite through the town. There were few people taking exercise for pleasure in that rough weather, and the crowd of shipping in the Downs made the seaward view almost less lonely than the shore. It was a very simple little town with red tiled decent dwelling houses crowded forward toward the sea, as if their inmates wanted to watch the boatmen broke apart, one caught glimpses of a wild flat country, dotted here and there with weird trees in Indian file; and the youth looked wistfully toward the esert fields, as if he would fain have truck away across them, instead of oing on, as he did, toward the grim

Yet there, it was clear, festivity was oing forward, and friendly voices greeted him as he passed the gray old portal. And then, over his stern, sad ace, he dropped a mask of gayety, and though he relapsed into silence at times, he was as polite and conversible as the best of them.

There was a preparation for a dinner-party in the fine stiff old hall, with its rows of military portraits, and its dingy, bloodstained banners. The castle, the barraks and the fort itself had eagerly furnished guests to welcome the visitor of the day, a grand old general recently from honorable victories in the south of Europe.

After dinner, when the ceremony was fairly thawed, the good old general in the kindliness and pride of his heart displayed a little box, which had een given him by some grandee in Spain. It must have been too small of those tiny trifles in which fashionble folk used to carry comfits and At any rate, this box was set with diamonds and colored gems of rare value, and it passed from hand to hand, flashing brightly in the lamp ight, while the old warrior told dread stories of his campaigns, and of the daring and honor of his men.

But suddenly, at the end of a story so thrilling that all heads had been graned toward him, while the military ervants had thronged the door in rapt attention, the simple question was ask-

"But it cannot be lost, general," cried he officer in command of the fort, "In and in this room it must be still. No

The candles were brandished to and fro, under the tables, under the chairs, round the table drapery. But from no point flashed out the brilliant beauty of the little box.

"Still it must be here," insisted the commandant, "and surely no gentleman will think his honor infringed if cease. each in turn is asked to empty the contents of his pockets upon the table. I myself will be the first to do so. And

One after the other, the gentlemen on either side of the table followed his example, while sharp but not unfriendly eyes took eager note of strange pieces of personal property, and of dainty three-cornered notes, which might serve in the future as ment, which went on foreign service. material for bandinage and quizzing.

But one drew back when the commandant made his proposal. The young man who had walked in from the eastern end of the town dropped suddenly into his seat, whence he had risen in the first eagerness of, the search. He passed his hand once or twice, nervousy, through his hair, leaving it wild and straggling. And then he watched blankly, as the fruitless search drew nearer and nearer to himself. Within five minutes later, one or two of the officers were whispering to each other that any simpleton might have seen he did not expect it could be found.

His turn was the very last. "Ensign Ranson," said the commandant steadi-Ensign Ranson was certainly the first who had required to be called upon by name.

The youth arose. And though the rest of his face was of a deadly whiteness, there was a spot of burning red on each cheek.

"I don't think any gentleman should be asked to do this," he said. "I will give my word of honor, that the box is not upon my person. I did not even keep it in my hands for a moment; I merely took it and passed it on."

"Too high minded to look at such gew-gaws," sneered a spiteful old ma-jor under his breath.

"What men high in the sorvice and old enough to be his father have already done, Ensign Ranson may safely do also," said the commandant, with a severity which was not unkindly, for young Ranson looked such a boy among the crowd of men, mostly stout and middle-aged; and the very suspicion suddenly lowering over him made the old officer think of his own lads, growing up, and not quite sure to do well for themselves, after all.

"I would never have asked it for the sake of my box," observed the general, leaning back in his chair, and inward ly wondering what Lady Elizabeth would say of his carelessness.

"But we ask it for the sake of our honer general," said the commandant testily

"And we do not seem to have asked it needlessly," whispered the spiteful major.

"I will not do this thing!" cried young Ensign, passionately, and he looked wildly round the group, as if he sought for one face that would comprehend and compassionate his misery The face which looked the kindest was that of the old general himself, partly because it was not his hospitality which was outraged, partly because his genial nature was terribly shocked at finding anything of his the cause of such a wretched act of dishonor.

sent was not asked, and-"Certainly not!" "Out upon you!" "General, you must not think of indulging his insolent request," were the only sentences audible in the general hubbub that arose on every side.

But the general rose. "Gentlemen." he said, quietly, "I have never yet refused to listen to an enemy's petition. If you can satisfy me, sir, perhaps your comrades will take my word for you." There was a murmur of very relucant acquiescence, as the ensign bowed and waited respectfully to follow the general to the ante-chamber. They had not disappeared behind the heavy curtains before all sorts of surmises unseen till the chair was recovered last were whispered round the table, guesses and hints so wild and smister as to do credit neither to the heads nor hearts which originated them. The general and the ensign staid a longer time in the ante-room than would have sufficed to search the ensign's pocket twice and thrice over. Not a sound could be heard. If any conversation ed." was going forward, it must have been in a very low voice. The delay grew first awkward and then Even the whispers and rumors flagged into an excited watching.

At last the general and ensign came out. The ensign's face was still very pale; what flush remained upon it had mounted to the eyes. The old general was blowing his nose. "Ensign Ranson has thoroughly satisfied me," he said, in his most genial voice. "Never mind my box. It has vanished by one of those mysterious accidents which will happen somehow. It will be found some day. And, now, gentlemen, perhaps, as we have been thus broken up, we shall not settle down again very comfortably to-night. I hope we shall see you all at the castle before Lady Elizabeth and I leave for

There was nothing more to be said. It was discovered that Ensign Ranson was not only invited to the castle with the other officers, but was also asked there by himself, and actually was believed to have taken tea with the genbacked as it was by the honest old offi- eral and Lady Elizabeth in their deepest retirement. For the general's sake, pieces and a tobacco pouch, half-pence, rather than his own, his brother officers continued on courteous terms with him; and he had always been so shy and held himself so aloof, that perhaps he did not discover there was but little cordiality in their courtesy. And presently he exchanged into another regi-

> He was away for several years, and in the fortune of war he got rapidly promoted, so that when he returned home, though he was still young, he was no longer a poor nobody. When he landed in his own country, he found a letter awaiting him, written by one who had sat near at that memorable dinner party, and who was now residing in the old castle where the general and Lady Elizabeth had then been guests. This letter pressed him, in the warmest terms, to spend some of his earliest days in England at this very castle, and so give many old friends who were in the neighborhood an opportunity of meeting and congratulating him. Ensign, now Colonel Ranson, smiled a little strangely when he read the invitation, but wrote a very polite reply and accepted it.

Once more he sat in the stately old banqueting-room of the fort. This time he had not walked in from the bleak east end of the town, but he had been driven to the castle in the chariot of the castle's owner. But as he took his seat in the chair of honor, he noticed that every face at the table was, in all its changes, familiar to him. All of the guests at the former dinner were not there. Many of those, indeed, he well knew, were sieeping on battlefields far away. But nobody was at this dinner who had not been at that other one.

Once more the dishes were removed and the servants withdrawn. The guest of this evening was no wonderful story-teller, like the good old general, who had now passed to his rest. Col. Ranson was as taciturn of Ensign Ranson had been shy, and he even let the conversation flag, and never seemed to notice it. "Colonel," said the eldest gentleman of the party, speaking with visible effort, and giving a slight cough to veil his embarrassment, "Colonel, I think we all remember another time when we dined together here."

"Certainly, I remember it," answered the colonel, raising his gray eyes, with a cool light in them.

"Colonel, we fancy you think some of us did you ill-justice then. At east, a lady says you felt so—Lady Elizabeth, the good old general's widow. If what we are going to do is in any way painful to you I hope you will pardon us, for we are only following her counsel. Colonel, there was a box lost that night. Here it is."

"Yes, there it was, gleaming once more in the light which danced gayly upon it. The colonel looked at it calm-

It must have found its way back to the general's own hands, and in the interest and excitement of his own story-telling he must have intended to slip it back into his pocket, which, if you recollect, was the first place where he sought it. Instead of that it evidently escaped the proper orifice, and dropped into the covering of the chair; that covering was very thick and heavy, and hung in lappets about his legs. Part of it was unsewn, and this box dropped between the damask and lining, and remained there, safely and year.'

"Gentlemen," said the colonel, with his accustomed calmness, though his lip trembled a little, "I cannot wonder if some of you thought my conduct suspicious. I thank you heartily for showing me your brotherly delight that those suspicions were unfound-

At the bottom of the table sat the spiteful old major (he was on half pay zerous booty into the hole in the damask, and that the mystery could not be called cleared up unless the colonel had explained why he had demurred to the search. And this spiteful old major would have said so much to his nearest neighbor if he had not been so terribly deaf he could not regulate his own voice between a confidential whisper and a mighty shout.

The colonel sat in silence for some minutes and toyed with his wine-glass, as if he quite forgot where he was. Then he recalled himself with a start, and, drawing some thing from his own pocket, said quietly:

"Gentlemen, I, too, have something to show you.'

All pressed ftrward as he carefully unfolded the soft paper packet and laid something on the table. What was it? What could it be?

It was the bleached skeleton of a sore to some of you. I think you felt that my appearance did not do justice to the dignity of my regiment. I believe I often looked rather shabby, but in reality I could not help it. I had only one relative in the world, and that was my mother's sister. After my mother died she had been as a mother to me, but when our home was finally broken up, there was nothing for it but she must be a governess in a stranger's house. And she did her work courageously and carefully enough till her strength failed and nobody wanted the services of a sick woman.

"She had always been good to me. And we two had only each other in the world. I could not help her as she ought to have been helped, but my pay would at least provide her such a home and such a maintenance as a poor working man can give a poor working woman. I took my aunt to lodge with the wife of the miller's man in the little black cottage beside the hill. She was a kind, cleanly woman, though rough and plain in her ways, and my poor aunt used to call herself happy there. But she could not eat the simple food my scanty means could procure. And the good landlady used to break my heart by suggesting that her appetite might be tempted by chicken or game, or such other luxuries beyond my utmost reach.

"All the day of that memorable dinner-party my aunt had been very feeble and falling. When I left her I really wondered whether she would be alive when I saw her again. My soul revolted at the sight of dainties which were of no good to me, and which I erate oven. could not convey to her who seemed dying for the want of them. Suddenly a bright idea siezed me. I took a letter from my pocket and spread it on my napkin, and then, by an adroit movement, transferred the wing of a and thence smuggled it to my pocket."

The listening guests began to look at each other with enlightened eyes. The spiteful old major felt that a very full explanation was being given, and he need not hear it! "Gentlemen, you can all imagine my feelings when such unlooked for circumstances threatened to expose my poor little plan. Gentlemen, there are some of you who were, like myself, young then-whom it would have been as hard to meet after such a discovery as it would have been, had I really stolen the jewels."

"Heaven forgive us, Ranson, but I can't say you are wrong," said one brave gentleman, who had been a fashionable dandy in those days, but who had a wife and six children now.

"Gentleman, I did not fear the old man, honored and enriched by a grateful country. The men who have fought the best battles of life have ever a pitiful respect for the poor and the friendless. To him I could lay bare my poor little secret. But my place then was among the young—the young who, having never conquered, always dispise the defeated—the vain, giddy youths, extravagant with their father's money, and-

"Oh, come, Ranson," cried one officer. "it is your turn now with a vengeance. Please to remember that to-night we are the abject and the defeated-and be merciful.

The colonel laughed. And they could not tell whether it was with good faith or subtle irony that he rejoined, "You are right," and then went on:

"In that little room yonder I told my sad story to that good, great man who is gone. And I folded up my queer treasure for I could not leave it behind to bear witness; and, besides, having paid such a terrible price for it, I did Why my aunt should not have it. And she ate it for her supper that very night, and next morning, almost "It was found in the very chair on as soon as it was light, there was the which you are now seated, colonel," he general, hammering at the cottage door, with a basket of fowls and fruit carried in his own hand. And then and there, I took this little chicken bone, and vowed that I would keep it till the snuff-box was found, and I myself was such a man among such men that none would smile at my poverty, or even despise my weakness

Do not be too sure that there can be but one sort of reason for secrecy and that a bad one. We should never think evil while it is possible for us to imagine good. Perhaps it is because God knows of so much goodness, which we never hear about, that He has patience with the world.

The Arlington estate, near Washington, now used as a national cemetery, is claimed as the property of Gen W. C. Lee, eldest son of Gen. Robert E. Lee. It was the property of G. W. P. Custis, who by will devised a life interest in it to Mary A. Lee, wife of Robert E. Lee, and on her death it reverted, as an absolute bequest, to her son, G. W. C. Lee. The Government came into possession of it by buying it at a a sale for taxes, the unpaid tax being the direct taxation of Congress under the act of 1862-63. It seems that a friend of the family at that time in Washington made a proffer of payment of this special tax, but the commissioners refused to receive it, under their rule not to accept the payment of taxes from any person not absolute ly interested in the property taxed. Judge Hughes, of the United States Court at Alexandria, Va., has just decided that the commissioners had no right to make any such rule. Young Lee does not purpose to take posses sion of the estate or disturb the existing order of things, but wants fair pay ment for the property. No wonder Paris can have the finest opera in the world, when the government furnishes a grand opera house at a cost of $13,000,000 and gives a manager $160,000 a year to pay expenses This manager, by the way, gets a salary of $5000, $1600 more for house-rent, $1000 for his carriage and half of the profits, which have brought him in his room it was a few minutes ago, and in this room it must be still. THE HOUSEHOLD.

Stains produced by lemon-juice, vin egar, or other sharp corrosives, may be removed from silk by adding a little pearl-ash to soap-leather, and passing the material through the liquid. Spirits of hartshorn will restore the color.

To restore steel ornaments, take a few ashes from the common kitchen range; rub them almost to an inpalpable powder, and sift them through a piece of fine muslin. Apply this to the ornament to be cleaned with a bit of half a pound of suet, chopped fine: chamois leather, after which dust out the powder thoroughly.

Soup for invalids and delicate chil lren should be made from lean beef chopped as fine as mince-meat, added to its own weight of cold water, and allowed to come slowly to the boiling point. Two minutes' brisk boiling is sufficient time for cooking such soup, which should be strained, and then carefully seasoned.

KING CAKE.—Three-quarters of a pound of butter, one and a quarter pounds of sugar, one nutmeg, six eggs, and cup milk; flour to make an ordinary batter.

INDIAN BAKED PUDDING.—Take two quarts of sweet milk, boil one quart, and while boiling stir in as much fine Indian meal as will make a very stiff batter; add a teaspoonful of salt and make very sweet with molasses. Butter a pan and pour the batter in, and pour the remaining quart of cold milk over it. Cut little bits of butter and put on the top, and bake two hours in a mod-

When quite smooth spread it out, about half an inch thick, over a well buttered tin, and bake for fifteen or twenty minutes in a moderate oven; spread it all over equally with jam, roll it up and put it into the oven again for a short time, sprinkle with powdered sugar and serve cold; if liked, with a custard round it.

> SCALLOPED MUTTON. - Cut cold boiled or roast mutton into bits, re moving all skin and gristle. If you have no gravy, make it by stewing the scraps and bones in a little water, then season with pepper, salt and tomato catsup, and strain it over the meat. Boil some potatoes, and mash them while hot until they are free from lumps, then beat with a fork until white and light; add a lump of butter, some milk, and lastly a beaten egg Mix well, then place the meat and gravy in a pudding dish; spread the mashed potato—which should be quite soft—smoothly on top, brush it evenly with a beaten egg and bake it in a quick oven until it is a beautiful golden brown. This makes an excellent break fast dish and can be prepared—ready for baking-the night before. Especial care should be taken to have plenty of gravy, as it is absorbed in cooking, and the dish will not be so palatable if too dry. Carpets have changed in character of late years, for it has been clearly demonstrated by oculists that the large staring designs injure the eyes and produce a headache. The experience of any one will show in living or visiting where glaring carpets are in use, and especially in examining various rooms in hotels or residences, where new and intensely bright carpets have been laid down. After a visit of inspection of this kind it is singular how certain the carpet headache will prove to magnify itself. Small designs, except the rooms be very large, are the fashion, and these designs are usually in subdued colors, the dead oriental hues being in immense vogue.

ENGRAVED silver frequently becomes unsightly to the "particular" housekeeper, by reason of the dust and cleaning powder which have settled in the cavities, and become black. Such discolorations may be removed by using the settlings of water in which potatoes have been boiled. Plated ware may be cleaned in the same manner.

Never slight a good apple when you can find one. A raw, mellow apple is digested in an hour and a half. while boiled cabbage requires five hours. The most healthy dessert that can be placed on a table is a baked apple. If eaten frequently at breakfast, with coarse bread and butter, without meat or flesh of any kind, it has an admirable effect on the general system, often removing constipation, correcting acidities, and cooling off febrile conditions more effectually than the most approved medicines. If families could be induced to substitute apples, ripe and sound, for pies, cakes, and sweetmeats, with which their children are frequently stuffed, there would be a diminition in the total sum of doctors' bills, in a single year, sufficient to lay in a stock of this delicious fruit for the whole season's use.

COCOA SHELLS. — Put two tablespoonfuls cocoa shells into a little cold water; add to them a pint of boiling water, and boil for an hour; strain and add a pint of rich milk; let it come to a boil and serve. This makes a delicious drink, and very acceptable when coffee and tea are found to be injurious.

BEEFSTEAK PIE. - The New York Herald says that this recipe is given by a thorough English cook, born and one pound of flour, half a saltspoon of salt, a teaspoonful of baking powder mixed together, and sufficient cold water added to make it a stiff paste. 2. Cut one-third of the paste for the cover of the pudding basin in which the pudding is to be boiled. Boil the rest of the paste to the size required to line the pudding-basin. Grease with butter the pudding basin, and lay the paste in neatly. 3. Take two pounds of beef cut in slices. Dip each slice in flour as you lay it in the basin along with two kidneys, a little chopped parsley, a bit of good butter the size of an egg, a few drops of Worcester sauce, a teaspoonful of water, half a saltspoonful of salt, ditto of pepper. 4. Roll out the paste, cover to the size of the top of the basin, wet the edge of the paste which lines the basin, then lay the covers on and press the two edges together. Dip your nice clean puddingcloth in boiling water, flour it, tie it over the top of the basin. 5. Place the basin in a saucepan of boiling water and keep it boiling four hours. For serving, take off the cloth, turn the basin over on a nice warm plate, remove basin. This leaves your pudding the round pudding shape on top, though the basin is flat. When you stick your spoon in, the gravy will run out, lucious and healthy, and the meat within will be as tender as a young chicken. The pudding-basin referred to is a bowl of crockery holding a quart with a thick rim around the top, which makes it easy to tie the cloth on with a string.

A School of Cookery.

Miss Maria Parloa is teaching a school of cooking in Boston, of which the local papers speak in very high terms. We give the formulæ of Thursday's lesson, which were successfully illustrated as the lecture proceeded:

CREAM CELERY SOUP.

Pint of milk; six stalks of celery; tablespoonful each of flour and butter; slice of onion; small piece of mace. Boil the celery in a pint of hot water from 30 to 45 minutes; mash and add to the milk, which has been cooked; add then the onion, mace and flour, butter, salt and pepper, and strain.

BOILED RICE.

Wash and pick all the specks from a cup of rice. Let it stand in cold water two hours, and then put it in a deep kettle, with two quarts of water, and boil fast for thirty minutes. When it has boiled twenty minutes, throw in a great spoonful of salt. When done, turn into a cullender, and set in the oven a few minutes. When ready to dish, shake lightly and turn into the vegetable dish. Never use a spoon. The water in which the rice has been boiled makes a nice starch for colored clothes. The Southern rice cooks much quicker and is nicer than the Indian ice. If possible, always purchase the former.

CHICKEN FRICASSEE.

Boil the chicken until tender, and then cut small. Make a gravy of the water in which it was boiled, allowing a half-cup of flour and two spoonsful of butter to every quart. Mix the butter and flour. Season with salt and pepper and turn in the chicken, letting it boil five minutes. Garnish with boiled rice.

CHICKEN CURRY.

Make the same as white fricassee, with the addition of one teaspoonful of Indian curry to one pint of gravy, if it is liked strong; if not, half a teaspoonful. Dissolve the curry in a little water and stir in. Garnish the dish with rice. Veal and mutton can be curried in the same manner.

BAKED INDIAN PUDDING.

Three tablespoonfuls of Indian meal. one cup of molasses, two quarts of milk, two eggs, butter half the size of an egg, one tablespoonful of ginger, two teaspoonfuls of salt; boil one quart of the milk, and pour it boiling on the meal, then turn in the molasses, and next the cold milk, butter, ginger, salt and eggs. Bake five hours in a moderate oven. Serve with cream. The eggs and ginger may be omitted if you choose.

WINE WHIPS.

Into a pint of cream stir half a cup of sugar, half a glass of wine and a lump of ice; whip to a froth, and fill the

THE NEW INDUSTRY.

YPSILANTI, February, 19, 1879. Mr. Editor:—I noticed in your paper of on you.

Feb. 15th an article headed "A New Industry," and as there is urgent need of industry and also of enterprise, whereby in dustry can be encouraged, I, with others. would like to have you or your contribtors give us a full outline of this business in which Mr. Murby has for several years been engaged. It seems of a kind to require the labor of a class of people who often find it difficult to obtain employment, and who are ready and anxious to work whenever the opportunity is afforded.

It is a well known to farmers and others that the one item of good woolen yarn for socks, mittens, etc., is almost a thing of the past; that with the yarn now commonly on sale one week of ordinary wear causes the heels and toes of the modern woolen sock not only to colapse but totally to dis-

Tradition tells of times before banks were much in vogue that a good stout stocking used to answer the purpose of a savings bank. Now that we have a gold and silver currency again, why can't we have a better and a sounder basis for socks, mittens, etc., so that in case storage is needed for cash the thread would be strong enough to hold up a three-cent-piece?

As I understand it a comparatively small amount of money would give this business a fair trial. Such enterprises are encouraged and successful in other places. Let s know what there is to hinder the foundation of a company here where farmers and others have some spare capital waiting a safe investment: where also farmers can have their wool manufactured into yarn and have knit goods manufactured of stock, and patterns and colors of their own choice. Then also those whose labor is their capital can have an opportunity to invest and be a benefit to themselves and the community.

Let us hear more on this and kindred Yours truly, "FARMERS." subjects.

YPSILANTI, Feb. 19, 1879. Editor Commercial:—In last week's issue, I noticed an article headed "A New Industry," referring to the manufacture of knit goods by Mr. E. Murby. I write this communication more as an addition to that, for the purpose of keeping the matter before the citizens of Ypsilanti, than for any intrinsic merit it may contain. It would seem to me, and, I think, to every person who is interested in the growth and prosperity of our city, that to secure this enterprise at this point is an object much to be desired, not only for the extra amount of business added and money brought in, but for many other reasons, a very few of which please allow me to lay before your readers.

1st. Directly in the interest of the farmer is the fact that this business will consume a very large proportion of the wool which naturally comes to this market, and by having a home consumption for his wool the farmer can safely rely upon much better prices than when it goes through the hands of middle men. Besides this, he has the advantage of knowing that a better discrimination in the quality will be used, the grower having good, clean, light wool will stand a better chance of getting its full value, than when selling in the ordinary manner, when a margin of only two to five cents is allowed between the coarser and finer grades. So much for wool.

2d. It offers good, paying and honorable employment for a large class of persons who find it difficult to get work and carry out their other designs at the same time. There are a good many poor but ambitious young women who are trying hard to get an education and fit themselves for respectable positions in society, whose parents are not able to afford the time or money needed for this purpose. This enterprise, if we are successful in securing it, will enable from thirty to fifty, and perhaps more, to employ their spare hours outside of school, and at home in the evening, and to earn enough to buy their clothing and school

3d. It will give employment to a large chinists and other men around the estab-lishment. In fact, it would seem a branch give employment to quite an army, or regiment at least, of those who of necessity are recommend it to the capitalist, the business man and the philanthropist.

4th. Again, every person is anxious to see more money coming in than there is going out. This should be the general wish as a city, as well as for our individual pockets. This business will have that effect to a very great extent, and as the manufacturer re-ceives the money for his product he pays a large share of it to his operatives, who, in trade will receive its proportion, unless perhaps it may be the saloons, which steady employment may bereave of some of their present customers. Hoping to see more and better arguments in favor of this enterprise, until it shall have become a fixed certainty, I subscribe Respectfully yours, WILLIAM G. SHIPMAN.
